A self-supporting government enterprise, the U.S. Postal Service is the only delivery service that reaches every address in the nation: more than 161 million residences, businesses, and Post Office® Boxes. The Postal Service generally receives no direct support from taxpayers for its operations. With more than 31,000 retail offices (not including contract offices) and one of the most frequently visited websites of the federal government, the Postal Service relies on the sale of postage, products, and services to pay for operating expenses.

Ruth Bader Ginsburg

SUBJECT

Ruth Bader Ginsburg (1933–2020) served as the 107th Supreme Court Justice of the United States. After beginning her career as an activist lawyer fighting gender discrimination, Ginsburg became a respected jurist whose important opinions advancing gender equality and strong dissents on socially controversial rulings expressed her passionate advocacy of equal justice under law and made her an icon of American culture.

In 1972, Ginsburg began teaching at Columbia Law School, where she was hired as the school’s first female tenured law professor. That year she also co-founded and co-directed the Women’s Rights Project at the American Civil Liberties Union and played a key role in numerous equal protection cases.

By 1980, Ginsburg was determined to bring about change from the other side of the bench. In April of that year, she was nominated by President Jimmy Carter to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

On June 14, 1993, President Bill Clinton nominated Ginsburg to serve as a justice on the Supreme Court of the United States. She received the unanimous support of the Senate Judiciary Committee, was confirmed in the Senate by a vote of 96–3, and was sworn in as the 107th justice in the East Room of the White House on August 10, 1993.

ART DIRECTION

Commemorating Ruth Bader Ginsburg on a stamp held deep meaning for art director and designer Ethel Kessler. “It was such an honor working on this project,” she says, being tasked with depicting “someone who is so revered in the women’s movement, legal circles, and as a human being.”

Wanting to lend the appropriate level of prestige and gravitas to Ginsburg’s likeness, Kessler signed on award-winning illustrator and master realist artist Michael J. Deas to create the portrait. Deas provided several detailed pencil sketches (shown above) before making the final painting based on a photograph by Philip Bermingham.

“There are several very fine photographic portraits of Ginsburg,” Kessler notes, “but to my eye, the painted portrait is everlasting and a look into the soul.”

PHILATELY

The U.S. Postal Service has honored the country’s highest court and those who have served on it with various stamps over the years. A 1950 stamp featuring the Supreme Court Building in Washington, D.C., was part of the 150th anniversary celebration of the nation’s capital. Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., who believed that law is an essential force for social and political change and championed equal rights for all citizens, received his philatelic commemoration in 2009.

Ruth Bader Ginsburg (1933–2020) served as the 107th Supreme Court Justice of the United States. After beginning her career as an activist lawyer fighting gender discrimination, Ginsburg became a respected jurist whose important opinions advancing gender equality and strong dissents on socially controversial rulings expressed her passionate advocacy of equal justice under law and made her an icon of American culture.

The stamp art, an oil painting by Michael J. Deas based on a photograph by Philip Bermingham, is a portrait of Ginsburg in her black judicial robe with an intricate white collar. Her ornamental collars, especially the one she chose to wear when she dissented, defined her image in the mind of the public for years.

Beyond the Perf
Behind the scenes with the U.S. Postal Service

FOR ART DIRECTOR ANTONIO ALCALÁ, it took time to find a direction for the OSIRIS-REx stamp, which aimed to depict the NASA mission to study and map the asteroid Bennu.

Landing a mission-worthy design

FOR ART DIRECTOR ANTONIO ALCALÁ, it took time to find a direction for the OSIRIS-REx stamp, which aimed to depict the NASA mission to study and map the asteroid Bennu.

Conversations with NASA staff early in the design process revealed the mission had five important milestones. The Postal Service planned the stamp issuance around the final milestone — when a sample of the asteroid’s surface would be returned to Earth — and Alcalá chose to commemorate that moment on the stamp itself. “Then, knowing that a single milestone couldn’t communicate the whole mission,” Alcalá explained, “I created a selvage design showing the first four.”

An additional design challenge was the scale of the spacecraft itself. “We needed to make the capsule large enough so that people could see it clearly on the stamp. At the same time, the parachute deployment would be much higher and so much larger than the capsule itself. Trying to capture all those elements in the stamp, as well as a sense of the landscape that it would be returning to, was a bit complicated,” Alcalá recalled.

Alcalá worked closely with NASA to ensure his concepts depicted the spacecraft and mission accurately. Then, he set out to find an illustrator. The stamp design couldn’t be too fantastical because it needed to retain scientific integrity. “At the same time, we were looking for something that might give it a little something extra,” Alcalá added. He brought illustrator Alan Dingman into the project — a natural choice given his compelling art for science-fiction book covers.

The stamp and selvage art ultimately work together to convey the magnitude and importance of the OSIRIS-REx mission. Alcalá remarked, “It’s an honor to be able to commemorate NASA’s work with a stamp pane that helps the American public understand the agency’s amazing accomplishments.”
