

Post Offices in Operation since 1776

Dozens of Post Offices operated in colonial America prior to 1776, under the British. The first one was established in 1639, when the General Court of Massachusetts designated Richard Fairbanks's tavern in Boston as the official repository for mail brought from or sent overseas. There was no domestic mail service at the time.

On July 4, 1776, when the United States was born, nearly 70 Post Offices were in operation in the United Colonies, and 62 of them are still serving customers today. See the list below for more details.
